ABSTRACT

This "Bibliography Series" is a project of the Carolina Population Center Library/Technical Information Service, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. It is intended as a vehicle for the dissemination of quality bibliographies on topics of current interest to librarians, researchers and students in the population/family planning field. Initial distribution of the "Series" will be free, but the service will eventually be placed on a subscription basis. Issues will appear at irregular intervals, but will number at least 12 per year. This issue, number 2, entitled "Basic Reference Sources in Population/Family Planning: An Annotated Bibliography" consists of 34 bibliographic citations--each one including the following information: title, publisher, frequency of publication, specific information about the work, and the subject headings or categories under which information dealing with population and family planning may be found. The citations have been grouped into the broad categories of Population; Medical and Related Fields; Sociology and Related Fields; Public Opinion, Current Interest; Jurisprudence, Governmental and Business. The Bibliography Series is a project of the Carolina Population Center Library/Technical Information Service, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. It is intended as a vehicle for the dissemination of quality bibliographies on topics of current interest to librarians, researchers and students in the population/family planning field. The series is not limited to bibliographies compiled by the Carolina Population Center Library. We will be happy to review and consider any pertinent bibliographies for publication in the series. Full credit will be given to the individual or organization responsible for compilation.

We will also be happy to receive suggestions for topics to be covered, and notification of error or omissions in our listings. Subjects already planned for future numbers include studies relating age at marriage and fertility, population education, family planning education for health workers, paramedical personnel in family planning, and basic bibliographic sources: population and family planning.

Initial distribution of the Series will be free, but the service will eventually be placed on a subscription basis. Issues will appear at irregular intervals, but will number at least twelve per year.

We hope you will find this a useful service, and that you will let us know of any comments and/or criticisms you might have. Please address all correspondence to:

BASIC REFERENCE SOURCES IN POPULATION/FAMILY PLANNING: AN ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY

Population study is by nature a discipline of divergent interest. Sociology, medicine, and demography, three of the more basic areas of population interest are each broad fields, but population study now also includes among other fields the disciplines of business, jurisprudence, economics, statistics, biology, political science, and anthropology. Population study is also but one aspect of the even more diverse field of environmental studies. Thus, anyone desiring information on population and family planning is simultaneously confronted with both a wealth of fields to turn to and a paucity of specific sources.

This bibliography was designed to be of assistance in overcoming these two problems both for the individual researcher and the librarian. It is meant to aid the librarian who may have many of the basic indexes and bibliographies but lack a specialized collection of population materials. It is also intended to be of help to the population specialist who may have access to medical, sociological and demographic materials, but be without sources for the other important aspects of his chosen field.

The information included in each citation is as follows: title, publisher, frequency of publication, specific information about the work, and the subject headings or categories under which information dealing with population and family planning will be found. Also, for the convenience of those doing research on the campus of the University of North Carolina, a symbol is included to indicate in which library each of the reference sources will be found.

Library symbols:

- CPCL -- Carolina Population Center Library
- WI -- Wilson Library, Index area
- BA/SS -- Wilson Library, Business Administration and Social Science Reference
- HSL -- Health Sciences Library
- LL -- Law Library
- ZL -- Zoology Library

The works have been grouped into five broad categories for ease of identification, but it should be pointed out once again that due to the nature of population studies these categories should be considered only as groups of works, not as disciplines. The five categories are:

1. Population . . . . . page 1
2. Medical and Related Fields . . . . . 2
3. Sociology and Related Fields . . . . . 4
4. Public Opinion, Current Interest . . . . . 7
5. Jurisprudence, Governmental and Business . . . . 9

Arrangement within the groups is roughly from the general to the more specific.
